From the outside the Maharishi School in Lancashire looks extremely normal. Walk inside and you find rows of desks and children in uniforms, just as you would do in many other schools. After a short while, however, you become aware of the wonderfully calm atmosphere and the extraordinary lack of noise in the building. Talk to the teachers and you learn that the school has no major discipline problems, there is no bullying and children are rarely absent. So what is the secret?

1. Transcendental meditation and breathing exercises are an important part of the timetable at the Maharishi School. Pupils are taught how to relax mentally by closing their eyes and silently repeating over and over again a ‘mantra’, or Word of Wisdom, at certain times of the day. Meditation is seen by some as an effective way of relieving stress, which teenagers experience in the form of exam nerves, bullying and family break-ups. Its supporters also say that it helps to overcome hyperactivity, anxiety and aggression.

2. The school was started in 1986 by a group of parents who were dissatisfied with the state education system. The number of pupils at the school has increased since then from 14 to 100, with ages ranging from 4 to 16. Academic achievements are impressive and for the past five years pupils at the school have obtained the highest average GCSE exam marks for the whole of Lancashire. It’s not surprising then, that more and more parents are sending their children to be taught there.

3. Many people in the local community, however, are still unaware of the school’s existence. Others view the school with suspicion and associate it with mystic cults or the hippy movement of the sixties. ‘Local people don’t really understand what goes on here,’ explains one teacher. ‘They just see us a little strange and prefer to keep their distance.’

4. Teachers from other schools, however, are beginning to take an interest in the methods of the school. ‘After the silence of meditation the children are very aware, awake and receptive,’ explains head teacher, David Yates. ‘This is very beneficial for the teacher and means we have the best conditions for learning to take place. In some other schools teachers have difficulty just getting the students to listen. That is not a problem here.’

5. Is there a child who is creating a school problem, the school has a very thorough method of dealing with it. A four-page form has to be filled out by the teacher, but the first three pages of the form contain nothing but the child’s good points. In this way the problem does not become the main focus of attention; parents and teachers are encouraged to consider the child’s successes and achievements before they look at the last page.

6. But what do the children who study there think of the school’s approach? ‘Meditation really helps me with my work,’ says 15-year-old Ruth. ‘It makes me relaxed and I don’t get nervous during exams. It’s a shame it’s such a small school, though. I can’t study music because there aren’t enough pupils, and when we read plays by Shakespeare we all have to read three or four parts each. But I love it here, and I know I’ll miss the peace and quiet when I have to leave.’

A. Advantages and disadvantages

B. A calming influence

C. Different from the rest

D. Helping the slower students

E. Creating the right environment

F. A growing success

| 0 | I’m writing to you from our hotel room on the Mediterranean Island of Mallorca. Unfortunately, I can’t to tell you very much about the island | ✓ |
| 1. | because we’ve had such a terrible weather that we’ve hardly been out of the hotel since we have arrived. On our first day here the sky was overcast and the temperature was about twenty degrees, much lower than normal is at this time of the year. Then, the next day, we woke up to the sound like of torrential rain beating against the windows, and it’s been pouring with almost non-stop ever since. We’d have brought more books and games with us if we would had known it was going to be like this - the kids are beginning to get bored with playing cards all the time. Poor Katie was really looking forward to go swimming in the sea, but it’s far too rough for that and she can’t even go in the pool, which has been closed. |
